auguration of President Harrison, Mrs. regarded the pair with considerable interest, and they remarked with pleasure that time had dealt kindly with the elder lady, and that, with the exception of an added stoutness, which was not unbecoming. Mrs Belknap was as handsome as ever.

On the 15th of July the sleepy clerk at the Oriental hotel, Con-y Island, was shaken out of dreamy contempiation of his two-carat diamond shirt pin by the news that upon the evening's train from New York Mrs. Belknap, daughter and maid would arrive and that the best rooms in the house were to be placed at their disposal. From that day to this Mrs. Belknap has been summering at the Oriental and has held her own place. No sooner does she leave the room for the bathing pavilion between the Oriental and Manhattan Beach hotels than there is a quiver of excitemen about the place. The male guests of both hotels betake themselves in a body to the beach, and even the ladies, although they will not own it, are interested. It is not so much the way that Mrs. Belknap bathes that interests these idlers of a summers day, but it is the clothes, or rather the lack of clothes, that she bathes in. Until Saturday last the wife of the ex-secretary has worn at the bath a startling costume of white and red. It was a striped affair, showing her perfect form in all its graceful curves—a little, low necked, sleeveless bodice, and a very short skirt were all that it consisted of. The lady's lower limbs were incased in silk tights, The effect was starting as she dashed through the waves, throwing herself upon the crests with all the wild abandon of a water nymph. The bald-headed old gentleman in the surf almost chuckled with delight, and tough, weather-beaten John McKeegan, who acted as watchman at the Manhattan bathing pavilion for several years, could hardly be-

She made up her mind that she would not let the gossips gain a victory over her, and almost won the day, but Mrs. Belthanges daughter, who is a very beautiful and accomplished girl, did not relish the notoriety which her mother was attaining, and persuaded her to throw aside the objectional bathing suit and wear one less conspicuous. The haughty Blue Grass beauty did not like to give in, but she associated to yield to her daughter's estast consented to yield to her daughter's educed almost to a state of desperation. She appeared on the beach in a dark bitue gostome of the usual seaside style. The women who found fault with Mrs. Belthang's striped suit were smiling and happy when an Eagle reporter visited the bathing pavillon at Manbatan Beach. This morning one slight and delicately built girl of about forty summers, and neaven knows how many hard winters, said to a companion in the hearing of the scribe:
